The Washington University Africa Public Interest Law & Conflict Resolution Initiative is a student and faculty project begun in 2002 to assist law students and faculty with a desire to work and study in Africa, and to foster courses and programs on Africa at Washington University.

AFRICA SUMMER PUBLIC INTEREST LAW INTERNSHIPS

WashULaw students intern with NGOs, government offices, and courts in Africa through the law school's Global Public Interest Law Fellows-Africa summer internship program, coordinated by Professor Karen Tokarz. The program has helped to place over 200 WU law students for internships in South Africa, Ghana, Tanzania, Somalia, Kenya, Nigeria, Burkina Faso, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and Rwanda. One WashULaw student interned for the Refugee Appeals Authority in Cape Town in summer 2022 and six students worked with Legal Aid and the Legal Resources Centre in Durban, South Africa in 2019. Recent students also have worked with the International Labour Organization in Dar es Salaam. Students have received public interest stipends as well as travel stipends from the School of Law and Dagen-Legomsky Fellowships through the Whitney R. Harris World Law Institute.

AFRICA SEMESTER-IN-PRACTICE

Washington University Law students may intern abroad for a semester through the school's International Justice & Conflict Resolution Field Placement (10-12 cr.), coordinated by Professors Tokarz and Sadat. Marla Borkson, JD'17, interned at Legal Aid in Durban, South Africa, in fall 2016 and Aissatou Barry, JD'15, interned at the Legal Resources Center in Durban, South Africa in fall 2014. Nacente Seabury, JD'14, interned at FIDA-Ghana Legal Services in Accra in fall 2013. Over a dozen WU law students interned at the ICTR between 2005-2016, including Annie Schlappizzi, JD'13, and Natasha Wilson, JD'14 in fall 2012; Ilunga Kalala, JD'13, and Jenny Wren Morris, JD'13, in spring 2012; Jack Wilkerson, JD'12, in spring 2011; Lola Oguntebi, JD'11, in fall 2010; and Sarah Placzek, JD/MSW'10, in spring 2010.

AFRICA STUDY ABROAD

Washington University has two law student exchange programs in South Africa, with the University of KwaZulu-Natal (UKZN) and the University of Pretoria. Like Washington University, UKZN is a leader in clinical education and dispute resolution, while Pretoria boasts a number of influential research centers, including the Centre for Human Rights.

Chile: Several WashU Law students interned with Fiscalia del Medio Ambiente (FIMA), a local environmental law organization in Santiago, Chile, including Emma Wilhoit, JD '24; Ashley Walsh, JD '22; and Ryan Laudry, JD '21. The students engaged in broad-based environmental advocacy, writing grant proposals and conducting legal research on projects affecting indigenous communities and the environment. Rocky Esposito, JD '20, interned in summer 2018; Kendall Reeves, JD'18, interned in summer 2016; Melanie Lee, JD'19, interned with FIMA in summer 2015; Rachel Dowd, JD'16, interned in summer 2014; Claire Melvin, JD'15, interned in summer 2013; and Junko Nozawa, JD/LLM'13, interned for six months after graduation in spring and summer 2013. Camila Maturana, JD'12 did a six-month internship in fall and winter 2012 after her graduation, made possible through a post-graduate stipend provided by the Negotiation & Dispute Resolution Program and the Career Services Office. Caitlin McCoy, JD'14, interned in summer 2012; David Dill, JD'13, interned in summer 2011; and Matt Thomas, JD'10, spent a year interning at the organization following his graduation.

Ashlin Mosby, JD'15, interned in summer 2014 with Centro de Estudios de las Americas, and interned in summer 2013 with the Juan Guzman Foundation in Santiago, Chile, where she assisted a well-known former judge in capacity-building efforts through the development of a bilingual manual to educate civil society on human rights.

"Without the strength of the Washington University network and the willingness of faculty to reach out on my behalf, I would not have been able to intern with FIMA, an environmental NGO in Chile."
-David Dill, JD'13, Easter Island, Chile.

Panama and Brazil: Rachel Robinson, JD'17, and Ryan Baebler, JD'15, interned in summers 2015 and 2013, respectively, in Panama City, Panama, with Transparency International, a global civil society organization that fights corruption and fosters transparency. Colin Stapleton, JD'15, interned in Panama City in summer 2013 at the Comision de Justicia y Paz. Diogo Metz, JD, '14, interned in São Paulo, Brazil in summer 2012 with Connectas Human Rights, the human rights arm of the Instituto Pro Bono.

Melanie Lee, JD'17 (third row, far right) hiked in the Andes with co-workers in summer 2015 while interning for FIMA in Santiago.

Latin American Coursework

While in St. Louis, students can learn more about Latin American law and politics through a wide array of courses taught by Law School faculty and distinguished visiting scholars. Recent offerings include: Latin American Legal and Judicial Systems, taught by Juan Del Valle, LL.M., from Colombia, who also teaches Cross-Cultural Dispute Resolution every year; Immigration Law, taught by Professor Katie Meyer, who also teaches the Immigration Clinic; Transnational Migration and Citizenship, taught by Professor Gonçalo Matias, Assistant Professor at the Catholic University of Portugal School of Law and Legal Advisor to the President of Portugal; and Chile and United States, taught by Hugo Hurtado, partner at Beltramin Hurtado in Santiago, Chile. Students also may, with Registrar approval, take up to 6 hours of related graduate-level coursework in other schools across the University.

Latin America Speakers & Events

David Lopez, General Counsel, EEOC, presented “Title XII: An American Conversation on Workplace Equality” in fall 2016 and Xavier de Souza Briggs, V.P. Ford Foundation, Economic Opportunity & Assets Program presented “Toward a Just and Inclusive America” in spring 2015. The Latin America and Europe Initiative co-sponsored a talk by Professor Jim Cavallaro, Stanford University Law School, on “The Toxic Effects of Drone Strikes” and a talk by Thomas Saenz, General Counsel, Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, in spring 2014 on “America’s Critical Immigrant Workforce.” All of these talks were in conjunction with the Public Interest Law and Policy Speaker Series.

Alumni Spotlight

Fulbright Scholar Silvana Del Valle, LL.M.’10, J.S.D.’15, analyzed the effect of neoliberal principles on Chilean domestic violence statutes for her J.S.D. dissertation. A native of Santiago, Chile, Del Valle compared the approaches of several US states with the gender laws in her home country.

Nicole Solawetz Cortés, MSW/J.D.’12 and Jessica Mayo, J.D.’12, launched the Migrant and Immigrant Community Action Project (M.I.C.A.), a St. Louis-based, public interest law organization providing legal services and assistance to low-income migrants and immigrants in southeastern Missouri and southern Illinois in fall 2012. The MICA Project provides in-court representation of clients, legal assistance with applications to the U.S. immigration authorities, and community building programs.

Global Public Interest Law & Conflict Resolution Fellows Program:

South East Asia Initiative

The South East Asia Public Interest Law & Conflict Resolution Initiative is a student and faculty project begun in 2007 to assist Washington University Law students and faculty with a desire to intern, study, research, or work in South East Asia; to foster educational programs and courses on South East Asia at the university; and to advance human rights, conflict resolution, and access to justice in South East Asia. Since 2007, approximately 30 Washington University Law students have interned, studied, or worked in China, Korea, India, Thailand, Nepal and Cambodia. Students can intern in the summer for ten weeks for legal aid, public interest law organizations, courts and tribunals in South East Asia. Students also can study or intern in South East Asia for credit for a semester. In their placements, interns frequently engage in client interviewing and counseling, community education, negotiation and dispute resolution, human rights research and policy reporting, prison visits, trial preparation, and/or appellate brief writing.
